BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MARCH 28.

The Earl of CARESSLE laid, whatever might be the event of the struggle in which the Strifs were now en caged by the magnanimous and gallant conduct which they had maintained in relifting an unprovoked attack by the French Republic, they had done more than any other nation, England excepted, to put a ftop to the torrent of French power and French principles which threatened to defolate Europe. The empty praise of their Lordships, or of the other House of Parliament, might be unavailing to support them in the struggle in which they were involved; yet to know that they had been honoured by the approbation of a British Parlia-ment; to know that their generous defence of their in-dependence had called forth the admiration of all Brifortunes to which they might be doomed. He hoped, therefore, that fomething would be fuggested either now or on some other occasion, to enable the House regularly to express the fentiments which they enter-tained. He had no motion to make upon the subject at present; he only stated for the consideration of their consciences that in what he had said he had only antisipated the feelings of every man in the House.

Lord GREWILLS said, if there were any regular mode of laying the subject before the House, no doubt could be entertained of the opinion they would pronunce. Perhaps, however, an opportunity might oceur, in communications on the subject of the relations might be expressed. If any thing could add fortitude to the Swifs in their prefent arduous contest, it would be to know that the sympathy of every thing generous and liberal, of all who prized the bleffings of freedom and independence, went with them in their exertions which they made. This subject came peculiarly home to Englishmen, because they saw the Swifs like themfelves struggling in a cause for their liberties and their independence, for every thing which could be dear to individuals and to nations.

There being no question before the House, the conversation ended.

The order of the day being read,
The LORD CHANCELLOR rose to submit a few observations to their Lordships' consideration on the subject of the resolutions he, on a former day had had the honour of laying on their table, and would that night propole to be adopted by the House. He briefly recaated the points in the refolutions which have for pitulated the points in the resolutions which have for their object to regulate and determine the mode in fu-ture to be practifed in conducting acts for divorce. E-vidence is to be given by the parties at their Lordships bar, where they are to be examined if their Lordships think fit. Copies of the proceedings which may take place in Doctor's Commons are also to be required by their Lordships; and in general the spirit of the reso-lutions is, to prevent the collusion of parties, and bring forward every circumstance of evidence that may be connected with the case. He concluded with moving that the resolutions be agreed to-

The Bishop of ROCHESTER approved of the refolu-

The Bishop of ROCHESTER approved of the refolu-tions, and augured from them the most falutary reforms in the morals of the community.

Lord RADNOR approved of the resolutions in ge-neral, but considered that one of them, which required the personal attendance of parties to give evidence at their Lordships' Bar, liable to occasion much incon-venience and injury to individuals. Lord Sydney and fome others followed on the fame fide, and agreed in opinion with the Noble Lord who had just fat down.

The LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that there was no question of making those regulations a law; their Lordships could not make them such. They merely meant to be a regulation of their own proceedings, and to form a standing order of the House; and if in any case it should be deemed expedient to dispense with that order, it was competent for any Noble Lord to make a motion to that effect, after having given two days notice of fuch his intention. This explanation would, he trufted, remove the objections that had by fome Noble Lords been urged against the regulations.

The LORD CHANCELLOR then proceeded to read the regulations, and they were afterwards agreed to without any alteration.—Adjourned.

Counsel were heard at some length on this appeal (which was from one of the courts below). After which their Lordships affirmed the decree.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MARCH 20. SHIP-OWNERS.

Mr HENRY LASCELLES moved, that the fecond reading of the bill for the relief of owners and masters of fhips, which was ordered to be read on the 4th of April, be postponed to the 16th. ALDENS.

The Solicitor General brought up a bill to explain and amend the Alien Act of the 23d Geo. III.
By the provision of this new bill, no alien is to refide in this country who is unprovided with a licenceto obtain this licence, it is necessary that aliens should give in an account of their names, age, rank, and occu-pation—no person to entertain an alien without examin-ing into his licence—the forgery of a licence to be a ing into his licence—the forgery of a licence to be a felony—no alien to leave this country without a passport, &c. The bill was ordered to be read a fecond time.

DEPENCE OF THE COUNTRY. Mr Dundas role to acquaint the House, that, in confequence of suggestions which had been made to him persons most interested in this bill, he thought in right to propose the delay of a day, in going into the Committee. Already he had, he hoped, fully shewn how defirous he was that the measure should be underflood generally, and it was because he had indulged this wift, that he moved for the printing of the bill the day it was brought in. Thus must gentlemen have had early means of giving the measure that consideration which its importance demanded. With respect to the motion which stood for to-morrow (Mr Willerforce on the flave trade), he had no doubt but the Hon. Gentleman who was to bring it forward would yield to the urgency and importance of the prefent measure, and confent to delay it till fome early day in the next week.

Mr WILBERSORCE observed, that nothing but the mportance of the present measure could have induced him to agree to the delay required by his Right Hon.

Friend. He should therefore propose Tuesday next to bring on his motion, but would certainly not postpone it to a more distant period.

REDEMPTION OF THE LAND TAX.

Mr Prer faid, he should on Monday submit to the Toufe certain propositions on a subject of great importance—the redemption of the land tax. however, his intention to do more on that day than merely proposing certain resolutions, the printing of should at the same time move for, and, in order that Gentlemen might have time fully to confider a measure so new and important, he should propose going Wednesday; thus must the reinto a Committee on port necessarily be taken into consideration on Thursday, it being the last day before the recess.

There is a paper handing about in the higher circles, by which they are entering into a folemn engagement for the better observance of the Sabbath. It confilts of fix articles of felf-denial, of the following tenor:
That they neither shall give nor partake of hot dinners

That they neither shall give nor attend routes, assemblies,

That they neither thall give nor attend routes, anemones, or concerts upon the Sabbath.

That they shall neither ride out nor travel on horseback nor in carriages upon the Sabbath.

That they shall exert themselves to suppress all manner of couployment and wordly business upon the Sabbath.

That their servants shall not be suffered to go abroad on the

That they shall, with their households, begin and conclude the day with folemn prayer to the Almighty, and attend divine fervice at leaft twice in the courfe of the Sabbath.

This paper, which is now in circulation, has received the fignatures of a great number of the Dignitaries of the Church, and a Committee is formed for deviling the best means of making the religious observance of the Lord's Day general throughout the empire. Many propositions have been made towards this most serious end; the first of which, as it would obviously strike e very observer of the manners of the lower classes, is to thut up all the public-houses, inns, and taverns through kingdom; and secondly, to pass a bill for the day, fo as to make Sunday Jauring too dear for the pockets of the people. Many other fuggestions have been made; in which, however, all the learned Prelates are not agreed.

NAUTICAL INTELLIGENCE.

This morning arrived a mail from Lifbon, brough to Falmouth by the Adolphus packet, Captain Creafe, after a paffage of 23 days. By this mail we learn tha Earl St Vincent with his fleet had returned to Lifbon where it was currently reported that the French troops were marching through Spain, to attack Portugal. All the Portugueze troops were therefore on their way to the frontiers, and the English merchants, it is added, in confequence of this intelligence were preparing to Yesterday advices were received by Government of the general state of prepartion in some of the ports of France for the expedition against England. Within the last fortnight, the preparations, both naval and mi litary, are become more visible, and appear in some pla ces in a great degree of forwardness.

The following is an extract of a letter received from an officer belonging to the squadron of Sir Richard Strachan, off the mouth of the Siene:

Off Havre, March 25. port, rhe former of which and one of the latter are for fea. We boarded a neutral veffel yesterday, which informed us that most of the effective feamen Havre were fent two days before overland to Breft. preparations are making for some immediate expedition There are a great many flat-bottomed boats at Havre, that carry two heavy guns each, one in the bow, and the other in the stern. Twenty-two of them are now lying in the inner road, ant when we stand in, we oc casionally see the foldiers exercised in rowing and failing them. They are lugger-rigged, have from 30 to 40 oars, and carry from 70 to 80 men. We can count 14 more building upon the beach, which have been run up in a few days. All the vessels with which we have hitherto spoken agree in their accounts that it is the intention of the enemy to complete 100 of these boats. It is now understood, from every intelligence that can be collected, that a general attack is intended by way of feint against England, in order to favour a real ex pedition against Ireland."

By the same advices we understand that the prepara tions in the port of Brest have been renewed with great vigour; nine fail of the line appear to be ready for fea, befides 13 frigates.

A few more straggling ships from Jamaica are stated to have some in; but no mention is yet made of the arrival of the body of the fleet.

The Channel fleet, under the command of Lord Bridport, will be completely equipped in the course of a few days; it is not intended, however, that it should put to fea till the equinox is past, that it may be ready to oppose the enemy's force, in a manner becoming the martime flag of England.

EDINBURGH-APRIL 2.

TEROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT. 1

HOUSE OF COMMONS, March 30. Mr Wm. Dundas brought up a bill for incorporat ng the Commissioners for creeting Light Houses in Scotland. It was read a first time, and ordered to be read a fecond time on this day fortnight.

Gen. WALPOLE expressed his surprise that in conse quence of his having agreed to put off his motion ref-pecting the Maroons for one day, advantage had been taken of his absence, and every day of the week so pre-occupied, that he could not bring it on till after the He gave notice however, that if the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not bring up the report on the land tax on Thursday, he should expect to have that day left open for his motion.

Mr Pirr observed that all he had stated was, that he supposed the Hon. Gentleman's motion was not very prefling, as it had been frequently deferred by himfelf

The ATTORNEY GENERAL gave notice, that on Wednesday next he would move for leave to bring in a bill to prevent newspapers and other publications of that kind from being printed and published under fictitious names, or the names of persons who had no property or concern with them.

LAND TAX. Mr Pirr gave notice, that on Monday next he would move the House to resolve itself into a Committee on the land tax, in which he-would move the propolitions he alluded to yesterday.

DEFENCE OF THE COUNTRY. On the motion of Mr DUNDAS the House resolved into a Committee on the bill for the defence of the coun-Mr Douglas in the Chair.

Mr Dundas observed, that considerable alterations had been made in the bill, in consequence of the suggestions of several gentlemen; that as it was intended that the service should be entirely voluntary, there was no occasion for any exceptions being enumerated, these which were in the printed bill, he would therefore propose to be struck out. The blank of the age of the persons who were to serve was, on Mr Dundas's motion, filled up with the words "fifteen and under sixty."

Mr TIERNEY faid he could not allow the first clause to pass without making some remarks upon it. As the fervice was to be voluntary, he wished no improper distinctions to be made; but by the bill it appeared that those who did not offer to serve would be placed in an invidous fituation. There might be a great number of family reasons which would render it inconvenient for many persons to be called out, under the provisions of this bill, who might, notwithstanding, be as sincerely disposed to serve their country as any who heard him.

—But if the Lord Lieutenant of every county was to publish a list of all the persons who were willing to ferve, and another of all those who were not willing, fuch publications would have a very mischievous effect. If it was necessary to make distinctions at all, it could only be of the disaffected, but under this bill, those whose refusal might arise from domestic reason only, would be placed in the same invidious situation as those who were hostile to the Government. He had no other objection to the bill than this.

Mr Hobhouse gave the bill his most cordial support, though there were parts of some clauses to which he objected, particularly to those which in any degree tend-objected particularly to those which it any degree tended to render the fervice any other than voluntary.

Mr Dundas was perfectly of opinion that the bill would be the more falutary in proportion as the fervice was rendered voluntary. He wished it to rest entirely upon the zeal of the country. It was necessary that returns should be made to the Lord Lieutenant, in order that the number of persons willing to serve might be known, and also the description of the service they chufed to engage for. He would agree, however, to frike out that part of the clause which required the names and descriptions of the persons not willing to serve to be

Mr TIERNEY then faid, that he understood the name of the persons who were not willing to serve were not to be published, and that those who did agree to serve were not to be posted up upon church doors, &c.
Mr Pirr signified his affent to this.

After fome farther conversation the first clause was nended and agreed to.

Some discussion, but of inferior importance, took place upon the other clauses, after which the House was refumed and adjourned.

THE HAMBURGH MAIL.

The mail due on Wednesday arrived this two o'clock.

Letters from Rastadt of the date of the 15th of March state, that the French Ministers have returned an answer to the note of the deputation of the Empire; by which the latter confents to the cession of the left bank of the Rhine. The French Ministers among other things in the answer, require the principal of se cularization to be acknowledged, to provide indemnification. It is now believed the negociations will be protracted a confiderable time, as the question of indemnification will be found in every case to involve many difficulties.

STRASBOURG, MARCH 14.

The remainder of the Bernefe army, which has re-treated to the lake of Thun, is, is is faid, fo furrounded by the French that it will be obliged to furrender for want of provisions.

The Swifs, if we may trust to the most intelligent men, who have travelled among them, wanted a Reform as little any the people in Europe. Mr Coxe, a very intelligent writer, has observed of them, that there was no country in which happiness and content more univerfally prevailed. Whether the Government was aristocratical, democratical, or mixed, a general spirit of liberty pervaded and actuated the feveral Constitutions; fo that even the oligarchical states (which of all others are usually the most tyrannical) were here pe-culiarly mild; and the property of the subject was se-curely guarded against every kind of violation.

The heads of the bill for regulating the forces of the country in case of an invasion, will be found in the preceding columns of this paper. Several alterations, however, have been made on them by the Committee of th House of Commons, on the 30th uit. which will be found in the report transmitted by our London cor-

The Earl of Hillsborough (Marquis of Downshire in Ireland), feeling himself called upon, rofe—He avowed his readiness to meet the Noble Earl fully upon the subject in question; and would stake his credit upon the issue of the discussion; he would then repeat the tener of what he advanced on a former then repeat the tenor of what he advanced on a former night; which in the first instance was, that whatever cafual excesses might have been committed by the army in Ireland, they were never "performed by the order of Government, nor did the latter afford its fanction to them in any shape whatever. The Noble Earl (who defervedly stood high in his opinion, as well as in that of the Public), must know from personal experience, the difficulty of controlling the excesses of an army in all its operations; and the extreme unfairness of criminating or making its commanders responsible for every one of those. His Lordship had been honourably employed in America during the last war, and he must recollect what was then the language of Opposition, and of the Opposition Prints, even of his own conduct and of the army he commanded.—Was the army accu-fed, in the way he alluded to, no doubt groundlessly, with commission of excesses and the infliction of cruelties ?- Could the Noble Earl forget the language of the then Opposition respecting the execution of an American field officer (Colonel Haynes)?—These recollections would bring to his Lordship's mind what might be faid (and without foundation) of the operations of an army, and the conduct of its commanders. He felt himself called upon in a late debate, to come forward, as he had done, by a Noble Lord's asking with earnest-ness, Could any Noble Lord lay his hand upon his heart and say, that he thought coercive measures necesfary in the present situation of Ireland? He selt him-felf then called upon, and afferted most sincerely in the affirmative—the lituation of that country he knew to be unhappily such as to render measures rather of a coercive nature necessary: he repaired purposely to that kingdom to ascertain the fact, to be convinced from personal experience; he resided more than nine months in a part of the country which was in the greatest state of disturbance. He had affisted in endeavouring to quell them. He acknowledged, and would never hefitate to acknowledge, that he was one of the first who strongly recommended the Government of Ireland to ships adjourned till to-morrow. proclaim the county of Down, and the beneficial con-fequences of the measure were immediately felt. He was always one of the first to oppose the principles and proceedings of the United Irishmen. His Lordship spoke of their pretext of Parliamentary Reform with a mixture of indignation and ridicule. He never knew (fo we understood his Lordship) any fensible enlightened man, and of respectability, of the Roman Catholic perman, and of respectability, of the Roman Catholic per-fuafion, with whom he had converted, wish for what is called "Catholic Emancipation," nor any person of any other description, so gisted—an advocate for what was understood by "Radical Reform." The Noble

Lord had fpoken of the Curfew, as if it was generally enforced throughout the kingdom of Ireland. That was not the cafe. The measure was confined to particular diffricts. The proclamations were not, as it had been faid, to subject particular parts of the country to tyranny and difgrace !- No-they were to protect Majesty's liege subjects in their persons and properties, and were intended as the means of rescuing Ireland from being a province of France. The port of Belfast, which was the foul of the commerce of the north, instead of declining in its commerce in that very great and almost destructive degree, as described by the Noble Earl, had fallen comparatively, very little short of its produce in the most prosperous years. Taking its Customs and Excise together (we understood the Noble Marquis to state) that the fall from the highest to the lowest year of produce, was no more than from 101,000l. to 70,000l. Belfast and Cork were the only ports that fuffered a defalcation in their customs; but, on the other hand, the produce of the Customs in the ports of Dublin, Limerick, Newry, and Waterford, had confiderably increased. The tonnage of the shipping employed by the country had increased from the year 1790 to 1797, upwards of 70,000 tons. So much in refutation of the Noble Earl's description of the trade of Ireland. Recurring to the main subject, his Lordship continued, he agreed that the mifbehaviour of the military was greater than any wellwisher to both countries could be inclined to approve. But he was convinced that such conduct had not the approbation nor the coun-tenance of Government. He had affisted that respectable officer General Lake, in many of his operations in the north; and, a man of greater honour coolness, or intrepidity, nor a steadier officer, did he ever know. That General was perfectly well acquainted not only with every part of the north of Ireland, but with the wishes and temper of its inhabitants, and his measures were uniformly dictated by those considerations. His Lordship discanted upon the arduous fituations in which foldiers were frequently placed they were but men, they had their passions and feelings, they were alive to the diffinctions of country, and felt for the honour of their Sovereign. Some parts Latterly, however, and in the present exasperated of the conduct of certain corps, in another point of state of the public mind in that country, he had rather view, he must ever regret, in suffering themselves to be wished to abstain from surther agitation of the subject; suppose fupinely practised on. It appeared, that money had this (we understood the Noble Lord to say) was his been given, and their minds missed by pamphlets, handbills, and the like. The Noble Earl might talk of affidavits-for one affidavit of the discripton of these alintention at that moment to enter into the details of the luded to by him, he could produce teventy of the misbe-fubject, except compelled by the answer of the Noble haviour of the people of Ireland. He had been him-Marquis to do fo in his own vindication, in reply.—He self frequently the object of their unprovoked outrage, and he instanced the case of a man who was clearly convicted of conspiring against his life. This person had been adjudged to transportation. He had in numberless instances received threatening letters; as to what might have been directed against himself, he expected it from such persons, as one who dared to come forward and assist Government, in its efforts to protect the lives and properties of his Majesty's subjects in that ountry.

The Earl of Morra in reply observed, that with refpect to the Noble Lord's explanation relative to the necessity of coercive measures, much would depend upon what was understood by a system of coercion. If the fystem which was adopted in the Low Countries during heir revolt from-here his Lordship was interrupt

The Earl of CARNARVON, who spoke to order.-He requested their Lordships would consider the ex-treme delicacy of the subject they were about to enter opon, and which delicacy was adverted to in the bealfo to think that the Noble Marquis had gone into it rather too fully.

The Earl of Morra contended, that in this explana tion he had not exceeded the bounds ho first proposed to himself; he was well aware that any Peer could introduce all he wished to fay upon a subject, while professing to speak only to a particular part of it. It was a species of artisice which he dispised; and to prove this he would then content himself with putting into the Noble and learned Lord's hands the documents he had spoken of. He had only one observation to make upon them—that they did not relate to any casual or accidental excesses of the troops, respecting which Government could not fairly be blamed; they were of a different discription; one particularly related to-here his Lordship was stopped by Earl Strange (Duke of Athol) who spoke to order. He observed that the Noble Earl was obviously entering upon a detailed discussion of this subject, topics which every Noble Lord must feel the impropriety of then investigating; He wished their Lordships to recol-lect, that there was no question before the House.—He disapproved in the same view, of much of what fell from the Noble Marquis, and had once or twice intended to speak to order. He then moved, "That the House

The Earl of CARLISLE, in a very faint voice, made a few observations upon a point of order. With respect to the delivering of the Noble Earl's documents into the hands of the Learned Lord on the Woolfack, it was obviously irregular during the sitting of the House; in which case the regular modes were, first to move that the papers be laid upon the table; and, fecondly, to read them as part of a fpeech.

The Earl of MORRA, in explanation, feemed to difapprove of the proceeding of laying the documents u-pon the table. He had, he observed, offered them in quarter where they might be regularly contradicted.

Lord GRENVILLE faid a few words upon the point of order, and concurred with the two Noble Lords who had spoken upon that head, in deprecating the farther discussion of the subject-and at fix o'clock their Lord-
